

A PRIMER FOR HOST FAMILIES

A PRIMER FOR HOST FAMILIES

Hosting a Youth Exchange student from another country can be a wonderful experience. It allows a host family to become familiar with another culture and provides the opportunity to share a young student's hopes and ambitions. Youth Exchange promises to enrich the lives of the student and every member of your family.

This primer serves as a general introduction to the Rotary Youth Exchange program and an overview of host family responsibilities. Detailed information and any further questions you may have should be covered at an orientation session arranged by your local Youth Exchange program. Make sure you attend all of these important sessions to fully understand what you should expect as a host family for the Rotary Youth Exchange program and what the exchange student and program organizers expect of you.

INTRODUCTION

There are two principal types of Rotary youth exchanges:

1. Long-term exchanges usually last an academic year in the host country, during which the student lives with two to three host families and attends school.
2. Short-term exchanges vary from several days to several weeks; they often take place when school is not in session and usually do not include an academic program. Short-term exchanges usually involve a homestay experience with a family in the host country, but can also be organized as international youth camps that bring together students from many countries.

Host families for these programs can be Rotarians or non-Rotarians. Typical Rotary host families come in all shapes and sizes and might include young children, older children, or no children at all.

For non-Rotarian families, an important part of your hosting experience is understanding how Rotary works.

Rotary clubs are service organizations that strive to improve the quality of life in their communities, promote high ethical standards in business, and foster international understanding and goodwill throughout the world. Membership represents a cross section of local business and professional leaders. Clubs carry out a variety of service activities, one of which is Youth Exchange.

For administrative purposes, clubs are grouped into geographical areas called Rotary districts. The administration of a Rotary Youth Exchange program is carried out entirely at the club and district levels.

Rotary International (RI) is the association of Rotary clubs throughout the world. While RI encourages clubs and districts to undertake Youth Exchange activities and offers support through publications and suggested guidelines, Rotary districts run their Youth Exchange programs independently of RI.

Each year, Rotary districts worldwide arrange more than 7,000 international youth exchanges for secondary school students. A primary goal of the program is to foster world understanding through intercultural exchange.

Student Selection

Rotary Youth Exchange students are of secondary school age and generally accepted into the program if they are able to demonstrate an above-average academic record and involvement in extracurricular activities. It is standard practice for local Rotary clubs and districts to screen young people using detailed applications and interviews. This process helps ensure that only highly responsible and mature students are sent on an exchange. Program administrators in the student's home country generally assess an applicant's scholastic record, linguistic ability, and general adaptability, among other qualities. Disabled students are encouraged to apply for both long- and short-term exchanges.

Rules

Each club or district program has its own specific rules for students to follow. Students accepted into an exchange sign and agree to abide by a list of program rules before their departure from home. While the student's host Rotary club will discuss all program rules with both you and the student, you should review the rules with the student to be sure that everyone has a clear understanding of what is expected. Allow the student to discuss any needs or expectations with you any time during the exchange.

The program rules generally consist of commonsense stipulations, such as no driving of motor vehicles, no illegal use of drugs or alcohol, and the need to obtain special permission for travel outside of the local area while on the exchange. In addition, any romantic involvement during the exchange is discouraged (although companionship in accordance with cultural standards is encouraged). Sexual activity is strictly banned.

Rotary Club and District Responsibilities

The sponsor Rotary club or district in the student's home country will:

- Inform the host club or district of the student's travel itinerary and arrange outbound orientation.
- Maintain contact with the exchange student and the host district and club during the exchange.
- Arrange suitable debriefing for the exchange student when changing host families and upon his or her return from overseas.

The host Rotary club or district will:

- Screen all volunteers and host families before their participation in the program. The screening will include an application process, announced and unannounced home visits, and one or more interviews conducted by Rotarians. You may be required to provide references and agree to police background checks before being selected as a host.
- Meet the student on arrival.
- Arrange enrollment, tuition, and other educational matters with the local secondary school (for long-term exchanges).
- Conduct inbound orientation.
- Facilitate discussion of needs and expectations between you and the student, and organize some social and cultural functions for the student.
- Appoint a Rotarian counselor and possibly arrange a monthly allowance or stipend for the student (for long-term exchanges).
- Maintain contact with the student and host families during the exchange through the Rotarian counselor, who is not a member of the student's host family or their immediate social circle.

Host Family Responsibilities

While exchange students tend to be academic achievers with more developed coping skills than many teenagers, they are vulnerable, living in an unfamiliar country, and often functioning in a nonnative language.

You as a host have the most important responsibilities to make the exchange a success. Host families are to provide a safe, nonthreatening, respectful, and appropriate environment in which trust and friendship between you and the student can develop. To emphasize the host family's important role, Rotary International has adopted a Statement of Conduct for Working with Youth (see inside back cover) that must be understood and followed by all participants in the program.

Host families should maintain close contact with the host Rotary club so that any problems may be addressed and resolved quickly. In addition, the exchange student should always have free access to his or her counselor to talk about any concerns or problems during the exchange.

PREPARING TO HOST

Hosting a student can be extremely rewarding for all members of your family, and being a well prepared and involved host family will only enhance everyone's experience. Ask the local Rotary club or district for specific information.

Some anxiety is expected if you have never hosted an exchange student, but be sure you are comfortable with the idea before doing so. If you have serious reservations about hosting, feel that you cannot meet your obligations, or do not have adequate answers to your questions, you should not agree to host.

Below are some insights on what to expect before and during the exchange.

Preparing for the Exchange Student's Arrival

While the exchange student's sponsor and host Rotary clubs will be taking care of most of the logistics of the exchange, there are some ways you can prepare for the student's arrival. Consider whether you are familiar enough with the student's culture to understand any differences that may arise. If not, do some general research on the Internet or at the library. The local Rotary club may also be able to give you further information.

As soon as the student's name and contact information are known, the host family should contact the exchange student and his or her parents. The easiest way to do this is to obtain the student's e-mail address from the local program representative. You should extend a welcome to the student, including information about your family, i.e., how many members, their ages, hobbies, etc.; the type of clothing required for the climate if the student has not yet left home; the local community or school; and other considerations. In short, ask yourself what you would like to know about a new home in a foreign culture and supply that kind of information.

Meeting Your Exchange Student and Making Introductions

Although a Rotarian from the host Rotary club or district should be at the airport to meet the student on arrival, a member of the student's first host family should also be in the welcoming delegation. Please keep in mind that the student will likely be very tired upon arrival and need time to recover from jet lag, or fatigue, from adjusting to the duration of travel and time difference.

In addition to airport greetings, many host families organize informal welcoming parties for the newcomer. The purpose is to introduce the exchange student to family friends and people in the community with whom the student will have contact. After the party, the student can be eventually introduced to more members of his or her peer group, which will comprise the majority of associations during the exchange. Many host Rotary clubs hold a social event to start this process of introductions early in the exchange, especially if many exchange students are in the vicinity.

Rotary International has produced a list of "Sample Questions to Ask Your Host Family" for the students and host families to discuss early in the student's stay. If you would like a copy of these questions, please contact the local Rotary club or visit the Download section on the RI Web site at www.rotary.org.

Orientation and Adaptation

As stated above, exchange students will receive formal orientation from the district before and/or after arrival in the host country. But no matter how thorough the orientation, the student comes into the first host family as a stranger in a strange land, possibly encountering a strange language, a strange accent, or different use of words. The exchange may even be the student's first long trip away from home.

One way to ensure that the exchange student adapts as smoothly as possible is to realize that you and the student will have misconceptions about each other's cultures. What you consider to be ill-mannered or unacceptable behavior may be the norm in the student's culture and vice versa. Please be aware that these misapprehensions can lead hosts to attribute inaccurate motives to the student's actions. Some Rotary districts offer intercultural orientation to host families to address these issues, and you are encouraged to attend these sessions.

Another way to aid your visitor's adjustment is to share your culture with him or her as it exists in everyday life. This does not mean that you need to arrange elaborate entertainment. Simply make the student a part of your family with the opportunity to share in the same aspects of family life experienced by most teenage students in your culture. Try to treat the student as a member of your family and not as a guest. Also, treat the student as you would want your own child treated on an exchange.

It is desirable to have the student address the host parents with an informal title, such as "mom" or "dad" or by another appropriate name, to encourage the student to be part of the family. Developing this sort of relationship with the student early on will help ensure a smooth and successful homestay.

In spite of these considerations, the host family may not be able to resolve the student's feelings of homesickness or adequately address difficulties the student may have. A key element of the student's orientation program should be an explanation of the network that is in place. This network includes the host country counselor, school counselors, district Youth Exchange officers, club members, and the student's own family. Be sure the student knows how to contact each of these people, and do not feel threatened if the student feels unable to discuss problems with you.

This broad support network ensures that there is always someone the student can feel comfortable approaching if a concern or problem arises. However, students should be able to contact their parents more frequently than usual if a problem or concern is not easily resolvable.

General Family Arrangements

The length of stay with your family should have been determined before the student's arrival. The student should have his or her own bedroom or share a room with another young person of the same gender and a similar age. The exchange must, however, have his or her own bed and appropriate privacy to dress and bathe. A place should also be designated in the house that allows the student to study in privacy.

In addition to providing room and board, host parents are expected to exercise general parental supervision, as would the exchange's own parents. It is also the host parents' responsibility to notify the student's Rotarian counselor if the student is encountering any exceptional problems such as illness, difficulty in adapting to the host family or school, anxieties about family matters or relationships at home, or serious homesickness. Open communication with everyone involved is necessary in creating a safe atmosphere for the student and host family. The student should be encouraged to voice and address his or her concerns at any time.

It is wise to avoid misunderstandings by discussing the following issues and household rules from the start:

- Student responsibilities for household tasks, such as cleaning his or her room and helping with meals, as expected with one's own children
- Normal household routines: meal and retirement times, study hours, etc.
- Curfews
- House keys
- Explanation of emergency telephone numbers and procedures
- Information about local transportation (maps are useful)
- Religious practices
- Reasonable use of telephone and computer

SOME PRIMARY ISSUES FACING EXCHANGE STUDENTS

Although most exchange students are mature, they are still teenagers. Host families should consider this in dealing with the student during his or her stay. As the host family, you are the first point of contact for the student during the exchange. Should any serious problems occur, report them to the student's counselor immediately to discuss the situation and determine the best resolution. Voice any questions or concerns you may have — even seemingly insignificant ones — to the student's counselor or host Rotary club president or district Youth Exchange chair. While each exchange experience is unique, most students face certain issues at some point during an exchange, such as the following.

Language Proficiency

During their initial days together, students and host family members will become aware of any language problems that exist. Some students will have studied the host country's language before arrival, sometimes to a considerable extent.

Others may be required to take an additional language class upon their arrival. The knowledge gained from books, however, does not prepare one for daily language use. Be prepared for any slight misunderstandings and frustrations that may accompany communication with the student. Speak clearly and slowly and be patient.

Make every effort to see that the student understands what is being said about house rules, geographical directions, and other matters. Keep in mind that the frustration of communicating in an unfamiliar language may lead an embarrassed student to indicate he or she has understood something when such is not the case. Conversely, hosts should be sure that they understand what the student is telling them, and they should not hesitate to ask for clarification. Be prepared to go over some issues several times. On occasion it may be necessary to seek help from someone fluent in the exchangee's native language — a teacher, interpreter, or visitor from the student's home country.

Homesickness

Language problems, if present, often coexist with a phenomenon that nearly all exchange students face sooner or later: homesickness. After the novelty and excitement of the early stages of an exchange wear off, the student may suddenly feel alone in a strange place. This is a normal reaction. Homesick students may consider many day-to-day problems overwhelming and look nostalgically toward home.

Acute homesickness can be devastating. The best remedies may include contact with someone who speaks the student's native language and a full program of activities. A side trip to some point of interest or simply a social event can help, as well as encouraging the student to develop hobbies and join in other community functions. For long-term exchanges, the student's Rotarian or school counselor can help if the homesickness persists.

Medical Concerns

You should be informed of any special medical needs the student may have, including medications, allergies, or prescription eyewear (glasses or contact lenses). The host Rotary club or district will have the student's recent medical history along with his or her application materials.

Students are expected to have adequate medical insurance for their time in the host country. This insurance should be arranged through the district and cover any medical expenses incurred by the student. You should have a copy of this policy and any additional medical documentation while the student resides in your home.

Dietary Concerns

Students may have special dietary needs related to health, religion, or personal preference. These considerations should always be respected. Many foods in the host country may be new or seem strange to the student. Encourage students to try new dishes, but be accommodating to their preferences and do not force foods upon them.

School Concerns

Most long-term exchanges require schooling for the exchangee. While host Rotary clubs and districts make the necessary tuition arrangements with the local secondary school, host parents should see that the student gets started on the right foot. The first host parents should consider visiting the school counselor with the exchange student to arrange the study program. Be aware that exchange students often feel obligated to assume an almost impossible academic load. Advise the student against taking too many classes while adjusting to the new school.

The exchangee may also need your guidance to become acquainted with school procedures, particularly if accustomed to a radically different school system. Host brothers and sisters can help the school counselor provide assistance in this area. Be sure the student knows the way to and from school and how to get lunch off school grounds if needed.

Changing Families

Most long-term exchange students live with two to three different host families during the school year. This exposes the students to a variety of family life in the host country and allows them to better understand the culture as a whole. It is important that both the hosts and the exchange student realize at the outset the limited duration of each stay with a host family. The first change of families will probably be the most upsetting for the student, as he or she will have established a good rapport with the family that aided in overcoming the initial culture shock.

As a result, the exchange student should ideally be introduced to his or her next host family early in the exchange. It is often a good idea to arrange for the new host family to pick up the exchange student at the previous family's home to ease the transition from one to another, and for the previous families to make occasional visits.

If the student is having difficulty changing families, offer him or her words of sympathetic understanding, couched in terms of a broadening of opportunity. Guidance from the Rotarian counselor, an understanding teacher, or a representative of the individual's religion can help smooth the transition.

Exchange Student's Rotary Obligations

Hosts are encouraged to help their exchange student meet Rotary obligations, which take precedence over other extracurricular activities. These obligations usually include attendance at Rotary functions such as club and/or district meetings and may involve giving a speech. The student's sharing of the exchange experience with the host club or district is an important feature of the exchange and contributes to the student's ambassadorial role.

Hosts should be aware of Rotary obligations from the start and factor them into the student's overall adjustment process. Be aware, for example, that the student will need time to adjust to the new culture and language before being required to speak at a Rotary function. It is a good idea for the student to attend Rotary club meetings early in the exchange as part of the familiarization process, so that he or she will feel comfortable speaking at these meetings later.

Students should not be permitted to decline speaking at Rotary meetings with the excuse that he or she is “not a public speaker.” The student is not expected to be an experienced orator. Audiences are interested in seeing the student and hearing his or her reactions to the culture, not the polished delivery of a speech.

Non-Rotarian host families may also want to consider participating with the student in these Rotary functions. This type of support may go a long way in making the student feel more comfortable at Rotary events.

SUMMARY

The responsibility of hosting an exchange student can be summarized as follows:

- Meet your exchange student on arrival in your country, and make him or her feel at home as part of the family.
- Treat the student as you would wish a member of your family to be treated while living abroad.
- Ensure that the student is in a safe, respectful, and appropriate environment at all times.

- Involve the student in chores, responsibilities, and activities similar to those of your own family members.
- Monitor the student’s performance at school.
- Help the student master your language.
- Encourage the student to meet other young people.
- Guard the student from outside demands to allow him or her time to accept Rotary obligations.
- Be tolerant of differences and willing to change your own ideas.

The responsibility of hosting an exchange student is not complicated, but does require understanding, compassion, and patience. The rewards of hosting a student through your local Rotary Youth Exchange program are great. They include expanded views, international understanding, and the development of long-term friendships, to name a few. Additional information about hosting an exchange student in your community is available from your local Rotary club or district.

Congratulations on your decision to enrich your life, while making a world of difference in the life of an exchange student.

STATEMENT OF CONDUCT FOR WORKING WITH YOUTH

Rotary International is committed to creating and maintaining the safest possible environment for all participants in Rotary activities. It is the duty of all Rotarians, Rotarians' partners, and any volunteers to safeguard to the best of their ability the welfare of and to prevent the physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of children and young people with whom they come into contact through Rotary.
